

Family Search on the Road

A major free family history exhibition with over one billion names available for research is now operating throughout the United Kingdom and Ireland.(see next venue below).

Called Family Search on the Road, the exhibition features displays, free to use computer terminals, and state of the art software linked via satellite to the world's largest genealogical database. Family Search on the Road will be popular with anyone interested in researching their own family tree.

The LDS Church , famous for their familysearch site will be exhibiting around the UK.

Church spokesperson David Fewster said:

"We are delighted to be bringing this wonderful exhibition to the UK. 2007 was the 170th anniversary year of the arrival of the first Mormons in the British Isles. During those 170 years countless members of the public have helped us in our quest to identify our ancestors. We now want to repay their kindness by helping others to use the database and build their family tree too. This exhibition is free for all to use and enjoy, particularly for those who have wanted to start their family history research but have not got around to it."
